Disruption, Special Climate Considerations, and Striking the Balance

(Ole W. Pedersen) 129

This Review Essay focuses on the Grand Chamber's decisions in the three cases of Verein KlimaSeniorinnen Switzerland et al v. Switzerland, Carême v. France, and Duarte Agostinho and Others v. Portugal and 32 Others. The cases arise from novel and exceptional legal questions, giving the Grand Chamber an opportunity to establish an authoritative framework on the nexus between climate change and human rights.

This decision by the Constitutional Court of the Republic of Korea is the first high court ruling on climate change in both Korea and Asia. The decision provides insights into the global spread of human rights-based climate change litigation. In particular, it found that the National Assembly and president of the Republic of Korea violated the obligation to protect the environmental rights of the complainants.

M.K. Ranjitsinh and Others v. Union of India and Others. 2024 INSC 280 (Aman Kumar)

147

This decision of the Supreme Court of India exemplifies the development-environment dichotomy, especially as it relates to wildlife. The case illustrates how the Indian government keeps its Intended Nationally

Determined Contribution (NDC) to the UNFCCC in mind while carrying out any wildlife conservatory efforts in the wider context of climate change.
